Trustworthiness of Bangladeshi mainstream media among ULAB students.

Introduction

The number of news agencies in Bangladesh has significantly increased in the last ten years. Besides the printing press and TV channels, there are many online portals that are now providing news. One of the main reasons behind those online news portals is the increasing availability and popularity of social networking sites. Increasing media demands and the authenticity of those media, moreover, using patterns of those media, have reached a new height (MRDI.bd, 2022). Sometimes questions rise about the authenticity of that news (Wiesbaden, 2018). Moreover, in order to publish news faster than another media house, sometimes they provide false news, which raises questions about the authenticity of that news (Schranz, Schneider & Eisenegger, 2018). The quantitative research showed that news consumers have doubts about different types of news (MRDI, 2022). So this present article seeks to examine the reliability among ULAB students on Bangladeshi mainstream media. Here trustworthiness represents students' dependability or, in another word, reliability. Mainstream media here is presenting a traditional mix of government-owned and private media. Most significantly, students' data for this paper will count current students who enrolled till fall 2022. The study method will be a survey. Data from 300 students will be used for this paper.

Background

The mainstream media refers to regular newspapers, television, and other news resources that most people know about and use as usual to gather information. Mainstream media includes print, broadcast (television and radio). Bangladesh has two types of media: state-run and private. The number of state-run media houses is limited, but private media is rapidly growing. News agencies had their footprint on this land before independence. Bangladesh Sangbad Sangstha (BSS) is one of the state-run news agencies. In Bangladesh, the state-owned news channel is named Bangladesh Television (BTV) also another one is widely known as BTV World. Besides those state-owned TV channels, there are many rising private television channels, which are also providing information to the people. Moreover, the state-owned radio channel name is Bangladesh Betar. It was established in 1971 and still provides services. Besides this government owned radio channels, there are also 25 different radio stations. And those stations are providing many programs, also they are coming up with many modern intellectual ideas.

As the mass media is often considered as the fourth branch of a government (YSSE, 22). Daily reporting constantly discovers many new ways to deal with different social problems and issues in their audience (Taylor & Francis, 2022). And students are the future of a nation. They are the potential progressive future so this finding demands further inquiry.

Purpose of the study

The media provides more information to the masses to acquire knowledge, but it can't be denied that students are their biggest audience (USAID, 2022). The media has a great influence on students. It makes people as well as students aware of their rights and tells them about different problems in society and also about crises. But recently, a few questions arose when Bangladeshi mainstream media didn't cover 'Tony Murder' properly. Even though, just to be in the news competition, some portals have tendency to prove fake news (Knudsen, Dahlberg, Iversen & Johannesson, 2021). During the COVID-19 crisis, the role of government-oriented mainstream media was also raised. ULAB is one of the well-recognized universities in Bangladesh. So, it is now necessary to find out ULABian dependence on Bangladeshi mainstream media. Therefore, finding out the reliability among ULAB students on Bangladeshi mainstream media will be the main objective of this paper.

Objectives of this research

This current study will seek to investigate the dependability of mainstream media among ULAB students. Specific objectivities of this paper are-

- To explore, do the ULABians follow mainstream Bangladeshi media for news or not?
- To investigate, do they prefer government-oriented or privately owned media for authenticity?
- To examine after receiving any news how they verify it.
- To find out, do they go for secondary sources for verifying news?
- Finally, to know whether the students of ULAB really can rely on Bangladeshi mainstream media or not.

Research Questions

- I. How many ULABians follow Bangladeshi mainstream media for news?
- II. Which main-stream media ULABians think there is more trust between the government and privately owned news houses.
- III. How do ULABians verify any news after receiving it from any media house?
- IV. How many of them go for secondary sources to verify the news?
- V. How many of them can trust Bangladeshi mainstream media completely?

Scopes and Limitations

Scopes

- Steps can be taken to make them aware of verifying news before taking any steps.
- A seminar can be organized for students on media literacy
- Finding out the behavior pattern on fake news.

Limitation

- Not all the student's data can be collected.

Literature Review

Review 1

Title	Factors affecting media trust in Bangladesh
Author, Publications Year and Journal/Doi	MRDI Year -2022 Journal-MRDI.BD DOI: https://mrdibd.org/wp-content/uploads/2022/02/Trust-but-Verify.pdf
Aim/Objective	To develop a foundation of understanding in media trust and develop audience segments based on respondents' attitude and behavior as regards media trustworthiness.
Methodology and Sample	Focus group discussion, Survey Data type-Qualitative Sample-5 types of media houses and media professionals.
Results/Main Findings	Bangladeshi people are facing problems of growing online fake news. Over 3 quarter of news users were confident in their ability to recognize fake news. News reporters are not broadly aware of DSA (Digital security act)

Methodology/ Sampling	Survey and online data analyzing. Quantitative data type
Aim/objectivity	The reason for this paper is two fold. First it tries to find out how news media trust has been conceptualized and also tries to find out which media trust influences the use of regular news vs. nonmainstream media.
Results and findings	Organizations' data and their way of treating new media houses. Collected 13 news houses data that proves media trust influences the use of different types of media.

Research Design

Methodology

For this study our method will be a survey. It will allow us to pinpoint and find out our purpose directly. As we will be using surveys that means we will be working with numerical data. That's why our suitable research approach will be quantitative. We will collect our data through Google Forms. There is no need for in-depth conversation, so this data collection method will be less biased than others. We will be sending our forms through lab mail to the students and they will fill up this form by answering a few multiple-choice questions. This is how we will get to know their reliability on Bangladeshi mainstream media.

Sampling

For this research we will be taking data of 300 students of ulab from 5 different departments. Those departments are MSJ, English, BBA, CSE, ETE, and EEE. That means from each department we will be collecting data of 50 students.

- Stratified data for the survey.
- For the survey method, first we will collect all the population data. Then categorised according to 6 existing departments. That means there will be 6 strata and from each strata we will collect data from the first 50 students based on their response.

Timeframe

Category	Time required
Survey	1 month
Literature Review	1 month
Data collection (survey)	15 days
Data Processing and analysis	1 month
Writing Final Document	1 month
Total	4 months 15 days.

Budget
